PREFACE.

We present to our generous patrons of the cities of Madison and Columbus this dual directory with much pleasure, and but few misgivings, notwithstanding many obstacles have presented themselves—some foreseen, others not anticipated. With a Directory every man is a critic. Should he find his name omitted, improperly spelled, or incorrectly located, or similar errors in connection with his friends, the conclusion is at once adverse to the whole. And while we do not lay the slightest claim to infallibility, we feel that after much labor, care and expense, we have accomplished all, and more than has been promised. And as this work has extended itself beyond its originally assigned limits, there may have possibly some few errors slipped in, as there must be in all directories more or less, which we beg our kind patrons may overlook. To the advertisements in this work, the publishers would respectfully call especial attention, they represent none but the most solid and reliable business houses.

The compilation of the Madison Directory makes an exhibit of 3,640 names, and with four as a basis—the standard number in all cities—would give to this city a population of fourteen thousand five hundred and sixty, showing an increase over the Census of 1870, of 3,851 names, and which we believe to be as nearly correct as can possibly be arrived at.

With many thanks to our patrons for their generous confidence and patronage. We remain,

The Public's most Obedient Servants,

EDMONDSON BROS.
